The Cambridge Dictionary Online defines liaison as, "someone who helps groups to communicate effectively with each other."

Some of the current and past Library Advisory Board members wonder if Councilman Orean, the current City Council Liaison to the Board, understands his duty as liaison.

It began following a Jan. 8, 2007 Dallas Morning News article which quoted Councilman Orean as saying that the operations at the Bedford Public Library are "grossly inefficient."

Since then, at least one letter and two email messages have been sent to Mayor Story requesting a different liaison. In one of those communications, the writer cited a specific example of what she believed was inappropriate behavior for a liaison:

"I also feel he comes to our library board meetings and uses some of our discussions in an unfavorable way, such as when he reports to the council only one side of a position. Example is when Maria gave 5 unfavorable reports and studies on outsourcing and 1 favorable one in the beginning of the study, and he selected only the favorable one to present to the council."

The Liaison position has not been discussed at any Board meeting during Councilman Orean's current term, and it is clear that some Board members are supportive of the Councilman.

During the July 24 City Council Meeting, Mayor Story opened the item calling for discussion of liaisons to boards, commissions and committees with the comment that, "Some cities don't have council liaisons to boards and commissions, and the reason they don't is their philosophy is, 'We want them to be an independent committee/board to research conclusions, come to us, give us what they think is the right way to go.' " He said the other cities don't want the boards or commissions to be "unduly influenced" or to be sitting there trying to figure out what the City Council wants them to do.

When the mayor recommended that the Council develop a Liaisons' Policy during the coming month for inclusion in the Council Member Procedures and Rules, the Council agreed by consensus.

Below is a transcript of some of the discussion that followed.

Councilman Turner: "As best I understand, the purpose of the Council Liaison to any board and commission is mutually beneficial. It should be beneficial to the Council. It should be beneficial to the board and commission. Why should we force an issue on the board who obviously is requesting a change? This defeats the main purpose for the liaison. If they don't feel they can work with a specific person, why should we force them to do that?"

Councilman Orea: "Dr. Turner, who do these boards and commissions work for?"

Councilman Turner: "The Council."

Orea: "So, if the Library Board has a problem with their Council Liaison, is it appropriate to remove the Council Liaison, or perhaps we ought to remove the Library Board."

Turner: "One or the other."

On Aug. 9, Mayor Story sent a letter to the members of the Beautification Commission, the Community Affairs Commission, the Library Advisory Board, and the Parks and Recreation Board indicating that, due to an oversight, those groups should have been given a "sunset review" prior to Jan. 1, 2007 as required by a Dec. 14, 2004 amendment to the City Charter. As a result, the Council will conduct that review and, for groups that are reauthorized, appoint members to those boards and commissions during tomorrow night's Council meeting.

This will provide a fresh opportunity to consider who will be the Liaison to the Library Advisory Board. As Mayor Story pointed out, some other municipalities have recognized that the advisory boards are not intended to tell the Council what it wants to hear. They are intended to present the Council with a different perspective. The Council is then expected to give that advice whatever weight it deems appropriate when considered along with the Council's other concerns.
