EDITORIAL: THE TAX RATE AND THE VISION

By Stu Updike

Should we continue trying to squeeze every last cent out of our budget, or spend wisely on developing a new vision for Bedford?

On Sept. 10, we ran a Letter to the Editor from Mary Hartwell in which she lamented that there seems to be no guiding vision for our City. This prompted me to ask our readers for their vision.

On Sept. 17, we ran a Letter to the Editor from John Hogg in which he opined that Bedford's taxes are too high and that, "The City Council should continue to examine every aspect of the City operation in an effort to reduce these high taxes."

It was not until I read Hank Henning's Letter to the Editor while preparing our Sept. 20 issue that I realized that the two previous letters actually identified two facets of the same conundrum: should we continue trying to squeeze every last cent out of our budget, or spend wisely on developing a new vision for Bedford?

As we work to develop a new vision, we must remember that comparing Bedford to Grapevine is as unrealistic as comparing Bedford to Dallas. As Mr. Henning pointed out in his Letter to the Editor, Grapevine has sales tax from all of the terminals and three hotels on DFW, Grapevine Mills Mall, Gaylord Texan and all of the downtown businesses. Hurst has Northeast Mall, and Euless has revenue from DFW airport and its rental car center. Bedford has no such revenue source to lighten our tax load.

On our 2006 tax statements there is a line which reads, "Additional city sales tax reduced your city ad valorem tax by ... " When I asked the Tarrant County Tax Assessor's Office how that number is derived, I was told that the estimated total 2006 sales tax revenue dedicated to property tax reduction is divided by the total of all the property valuations to arrive at a factor which is then multiplied by each person's property valuation. Mr. Hogg came up with $0.0790 per $100 valuation, and the figure I came up with was nearly the same.

What Mr. Hogg's explanation does not take into consideration, though, is that Bedford's shoppers include not only our homeowners but also the people who rent living quarters in town as well as the many people who shop here but live elsewhere. Each person who shopped in Bedford contributed to the total amount by which our ad valorem taxes were reduced.

For that reason, I cannot accept Mr. Hogg's assertion that he is paying an additional $0.0790 in taxes per $100 of valuation. In fact, if Mr. Hogg had made up his mind not to shop in Bedford at all for the entire year, his tax statement would not have changed because it was not reporting how much he paid in sales taxes. It was reporting what portion of the sales taxes that everyone paid was allocated to his property and that number would not have changed because he did not shop in Bedford, assuming the estimated sales tax did not change.

Mr. Hogg certainly is correct that we are not enjoying the General Homestead Exemption here in Bedford, but that is understandable in light of the fact that Bedford does not have any big sales tax generators.

Since there is such a huge disparity among the cities in terms of revenue generated, the question we should be asking is not whether our taxes are too high, but rather, how do our per capita expenses compare with the other cities?

Like you, I don't want to pay any more in taxes than I have to, but I am willing to support with my tax dollars a well thought-out vision for revitalizing our city. Until we do so, we continue to lose businesses which results in decreased revenue which, in turn, prompts increased property taxes.

It is important to keep our productivity high and our costs in line, but we cannot generate revenue by cutting taxes.

It's like Desert Pete said, "You've gotta prime the pump ... "
